

Interview scripts:

STUDENT RESEARCHER: Dawn Kowalczyk (48786016)

[DECO3500] Social and Mobile Computing, Semester 2, 2026.

We are interested in improving how concert audiences experience the time before a live performance in music venues through social and contextual computing that encourages interaction, wayfinding, and feelings of safety. This interview aims to better understand the concert experience and the design opportunity based on user values.

YOUR PARTICIPATION is an interview session (Duration: 5~10 minutes). The tester facilitates the interview to understand the values of participants and listen to your concert experience.

I will take notes and record the session to use for research purposes, as explained separately. Personal information will be de-identified. Participation is voluntary; you are free to withdraw from the study at any time, without penalty. The collected data will be shared after the session, ensuring co-ownership. Do you agree to proceed?

General

1. Tell me about your concert experience?
2. What was your best concert experience, why?
3. What was your worst concert experience, why?
4. Can you walk me through what you usually do from the moment you arrive at a concert venue until the performance starts?
5. Can you tell me about a time when you were waiting in line for a ticket check before a concert? What was happening around you, and how did you feel during the wait?

Specific

Q. Tell me about a night when the way a venue communicated before the show (signs, announcements, staff directions, app notifications, or lack thereof) clearly shaped how you and your group behaved.

Q. Describe a specific night when you or someone in your group got separated, lost, or couldn't find a meeting spot inside a venue before the show.

Q. Recall a pre-show experience where you ended up having a surprisingly good conversation or connection with other attendees before the music started.

Summary

The interviewee shares that memorable concerts often involve engaging all senses, such as dancing, good music, and a pleasant environment. The worst experience was marked by poor treatment from others. The interviewee typically finds a good spot upon arrival and stays there unless necessary. They do not recall specific instances of venue communication or getting lost affecting their experience. Positive pre-show interactions are common due to shared enjoyment of the concert.

Transcripts:

Speaker 1 00:04

Hello, my name is Dawn, and I'm a student researcher for Deco 3500 social and mobile computing this semester. We are interested in improving how concert audiences experience the time before the live performance in music venues through social and contextual computing that encourages interaction, wayfinding, and a feeling of safety. This interview aims to better understand the concert experience and the design opportunity based on users' values. Your participation is an interview session. The duration is five to 10 minutes. So I will facilitate the interview. The interview is to understand the values of participants and listen to your concert experience. I'll take notes and record the session to use for research purposes, as explained separately. Personal information will be de-identified. Participation is voluntary. You are free to withdraw from the study at any time without penalty. The collected data will be shared after the session, ensuring co-ownership. Do you agree to proceed?

Speaker 2 01:28

Yes.

Speaker 1 01:30

Yeah. So tell me about your concert experience.

Speaker 2 01:38

Well, I have been to a fair few concerts. Not sure if I can count them because there's been quite a few, but they were often in different locations. So the types of concerts that I went to varied from indoor auditorium style concerts where you have seats to open air outdoor style concerts where you have 1000s of people.

Speaker 1 02:21

And what was your best concert experience?

Speaker 2 02:28

Well, it depends on how I define what best is. Probably the one with the strongest.

memory, the the most longest lasting memory of a concert. I would say. Should you want me? You want me to tell you which concert was the best?

Speaker 1 02:59

Oh, I'm more interested in the concert experience in general, so you don't need to be maybe specific, I guess.

Speaker 3 03:07

Yeah.

Speaker 1 03:10

Strongest memory.

Speaker 2 03:16

And you want to know why it was the best? What made it?

Speaker 1 03:21

Yeah, it could be. So your best concert experience and reason. Why you think it's the best?

Speaker 2 03:36

probably the the ones where I got to dance. So the thing that makes the concert quite memorable involves engaging the senses. So you have hearing, obviously, that people think of when you when you go to a concert is to listen to music. But I think that there's more to it than that. When you go to concerts, especially festivals, there's usually food. So you would have taste, and the visuals. There's always visuals with concerts, and the the best concerts not didn't necessarily have the best visuals, but my favorite would have been ones that were in a beautiful place with nice, clean, fresh air, so it smelled really nice. Some concerts I went to had really bad smells, like from the portaloos and whatever. And but the best one, yeah, was was somewhere there was fresh air, and it didn't necessarily have the best visuals or the best sound, but the music was really good, and I got to dance, so I was physically engaged. Yeah, basically engaging all the senses, and that's to me, that's what made it most memorable.

Speaker 1 05:27

That's really great, yeah. And what was the worst to experience, worst concert experience, and religion? It was probably one where I was treated poorly by some people there, because usually in concerts people are very nice and happy. People go there to have a good time, but I guess maybe I got lucky and I met somebody who was mean, and that made it the worst concert.

Speaker 2 05:43

Speaker 1 06:18

I see. Yeah, the people you interact with, connecting your experience.

Speaker 3 06:25

Yes.

Speaker 1 06:26

How about? Can you walk me through what you usually do from the moment you arrive at the concert venue until the performance starts? Kind of your journey before console start when you arrive.

Speaker 2 06:46

Yeah, well, I usually like to find a good place to enjoy the concert first.

Speaker 1 06:57

Okay,

Speaker 2 06:59

because it depends on the the place that you go to. The place the the it'll give you a perspective, so you have a certain perspective, and that'll change the way that the sound comes to you. It'll change what happens when you need to go? If if you need to leave for some short time for some reason, like going to the cafe or getting some food or drink, or need to go to the toilet, depends on how long the concert goes for, but yeah. Then after that, I suppose it depends on the format of the concert and the structure that it has. But generally, I try not to move around too much once I find my place.

Speaker 1 08:05

Stay there. Okay, that's good. How about when you? Can you tell me about the time when you are waiting in line for a ticket check before a concert? What was happening around you, or how did you feel during that wait? Wait for check. Okay. sure.

Speaker 2 08:44

I'm just trying to think of a time when I can remember that. I can't remember that. Actually, that's okay. Then there is another question. Tell me about a night when you, when the way a venue communicated before the show, for example, signs, announcements, or staff directions, or notifications, clearly shaped how you and your group behaved. Your guidance. Oh, night of communication as well.

Speaker 1 08:58

Speaker 2 09:50

I can't remember any specific occurrence.

Speaker 1 09:57

Oh, okay. Then how about the specific night when you or someone in your group got separated or lost and couldn't find a meeting spot inside a venue before the show, what did you do or their time?

Speaker 2 10:16

I again, I don't think I can remember a time that happened.

Speaker 1 10:24

It took a specific question because sometimes

Speaker 2 10:26

I did go with somebody, and I I can't remember. I suppose it's it could be difficult for me to remember these things Because may have happened quite some time ago, and compared to the enjoyment of the concert, I I can't remember these details.

Speaker 1 10:59

Oh, okay, that's good. How about if you recall a pre-show experience where you ended up having a surprisingly good conversation or connection with other attendees before the music started? Do you remember that one?

Speaker 2 11:18

Yes. Yes, I think it's happened quite a lot. What do you want to know about it? Just generally hear about your experience.

Speaker 2 11:31

Yeah, well, it it's usually quite a good experience because the the people that go to the concert. You have something in common usually, so that you're going there to enjoy the concert together. So, so people seem more inclined to get to know each other. It seems more likely that you'll get along. So I like to talk to people in that state because people are usually much happier and kinder.

Speaker 1 12:24

Okay, thank you for your participation, and I'll share this data with you later. And yeah, it'll be great to find our design opportunities. Thank you.

Speaker 2 12:38

No worries.

Summarised and Transcribed by <https://otter.ai>