Speaker 1 (0:00 - 0:50)

Hi, dwij. Thanks for attending my interview, and I really appreciate that you take your time to do the interview with me. Our problem is about the concert.

People are usually waiting before the concert. It should be a pretty long time, and they will feel boring, and they'll feel unsatisfied. So our time is to make a research about that and try to make it better to solve that problem.

I prepared some interview questions to make user research. The first question is, can you walk me through what you usually do from the moment you arrive at the concert until the performance starts?

Speaker 2 (0:51 - 1:10)

I don't go to concerts that often. I've only gone to small concerts, not big stadium concerts. The concerts I go to, they do have a queue, so it's usually 15-20 minutes long.

I usually go with friends, so I'm just hanging out with my friends, talking to friends, we are on our phones, nothing unusual.

Speaker 1 (1:11 - 1:30)

Alright, that's a great question. The second one is, can you please describe a specific night when you or someone in your group get separated, lost, or couldn't find a meeting spot inside a venue before the show?

Speaker 2 (1:31 - 1:56)

So, meeting spots inside a venue before the show. Sure, that happens because some people are always late, and other people want to go inside and not wait for them. We usually go inside and send them our WhatsApp location, we share our WhatsApp location with them.

It's not precise, so when they are near us or around us, we usually have to look around, raise our hand, try to find them. It's all inconvenient, but that's what we do.

Speaker 1 (1:58 - 2:11)

The next one is, can you please think of a time you get generally unsafe or feel overwhelmed in a crowded venue before a performance begins?

Speaker 2 (2:13 - 2:30)

Personally, I haven't experienced such a scenario, but I can understand how people might, because it gets really crowded, it gets really loud, it gets dark. So I understand why people might feel uncomfortable, but personally, I haven't experienced such a situation yet.

Speaker 1 (2:30 - 2:48)

Yeah, that's fine. Still a great answer, I'll write it down. So, can you just recall a pre-show experience where you had a good conversation or connection with other attendees before the music started?

Speaker 2 (2:50 - 3:00)

So I usually talk to my friends, I'm not that social person, so I usually stick to my friends, talk to my friends. So yeah, I don't think I've had this experience before either.

Speaker 1 (3:01 - 3:24)

Yeah, sure. So, if you have the kind of experience, could you please tell me about a night when you communicated before the show? For example, the signs or stuff, directions, app notifications, clearly shapes how you and the group behaved.

Speaker 2 (3:24 - 3:50)

It's really helpful when they tell us from which gate exactly to enter from, based on our seats or based on our location. So it's really helpful when they tell us to enter from this gate. If you're taking public transport, they sometimes tell you to get off at this bus stop and walk, or how far it will be, and if it will be accessible or not.

So yeah, it's really helpful when the venue or the location gives us some advice on how to reach the location safely.

Speaker 1 (3:51 - 4:04)

Yeah, great answer. So the one last one, can you please tell me about a time when you were waiting in line for a ticket or before a concert? What was happening around you, and how did you feel during the wait?

Speaker 2 (4:05 - 4:24)

It's really boring, even if you're with friends, staying in line for minutes, 30-40 minutes, it can get really boring and annoying and tiring as well. Because you're going to a show, you want to be energetic, but you're waiting in a queue for 30-40 minutes doing nothing, just standing there. It can get really boring and tiring, I think.

Speaker 1 (4:24 - 4:33)

Yeah, pretty honest answer. Yeah, I think that's all, and thanks for attending my interview, and I'll stop the recording. Good luck.
